Conference Offers Different Perspective on Affordable Housing OHFA and OCCH to Bring Together Researchers, Academics, Public Officials and Others

COLUMBUS – The Ohio Housing Finance Agency (OHFA) is proud to partner with the Ohio Capital Corporation for Housing (OCCH) to present Starting at Home: Using Philanthropy, Research and Practice to Build a Better Ohio. This two-day event will take place at the Renaissance Columbus Downtown Hotel on Wednesday, April 29 and Thursday, April 30.

“This conference is truly the first of its kind in that we will bring together people from all walks of life who are passionate about affordable housing – from philanthropists and researchers to policymakers and politicians – to set an interdisciplinary agenda that will guide future partnerships,” said OHFA executive director Doug Garver. “Research shows that affordable housing is a powerful social determinant of health, education, financial stability, neighborhood revitalization and local governance.”

Headlining the event are keynote speakers Christopher Krehmeyer, president and CEO of Beyond Housing, a NeighborWorks America organization in St. Louis, Mo., and Chris Estes, president and CEO of National Housing Conference in Washington, D.C. Conference sessions will feature over 40 national, state and local speakers.

The two-day event will showcase housing-related sessions focused on the implications affordable housing has on education, healthcare and community stabilization, plus strategic discussions about how to identify opportunities for collaboration and policy development.

“OCCH is pleased to partner with OHFA on this unique and innovative conference,” said Hal Keller, OCCH president. “This event will focus on how affordable housing serves as a platform for the delivery of other critical services in our communities.”
